Fees charged for work performed can vary as a result of a number of factors.

Influences on lower fees may include:

- the inexperience of the registered migration agent concerned; the desire to enter a particular market
- the desire to assist in unusual circumstances
- the ease of that particular application
- the applicant having already partly completed the assignment
- the current marketplace fee levels.

Influences on higher fees may include:

- the use of a senior registered migration agent with many years' experience
- the specific difficulties or complexities of a particular case
- the costs associated with running a larger business or practice
- the desire of the applicant for high personal levels of service

You should check with your migration agent whether there are additional charges that are not included in the quoted fees, for example; photocopying, phone calls and couriers.
